to Oppose Code Baby Formulas; Officials Protest

The statement said the administration felt the United Nations had no business in "regulating economic activity."

Dr. Joseph said the administration's position was "inimical to the responsibilities of health professionals, contrary to the best interests of my country."

"Regrettably I find myself compelled to speak out in the strongest opposition to the U.S. government's position," he said.

"Wrong Decision"

"I realize that in doing so I am making it highly improbable that I can continue to serve effectively in AID if the U.S. vote is cast in rejection of the code as it is now contemplated," he added.

Mr. Babb said a lone U.S. negative vote in Geneva "is the wrong decision from every conceivable perspective," and said it was not too late for the administration to change its mind.

"This is not an issue of free enterprise vs. government regulation," Mr. Babb said. "The issue is whether the U.S. supports responsible commercial behavior of U.S. firms doing business in developing countries. We certainly demand it at home."

The two officials were introduced at the news conference by William McBeath, executive director of the private American Public Health Association, who endorsed their stand.

The two AID officials, who both have played roles in development of policy on the baby formula issue, are among the first senior government officials to break with the Reagan administration over a policy question.

The United States is expected to be the only government to vote against the code among the 157 nations participating in the Geneva meeting. The code is opposed by three large formula manufacturers and the Grocery Manufacturers of America.

Mr. Babb and Dr. Joseph informed AID Administrator M. Peter McPherson in a meeting Friday of their intention to break with the administration and quit their posts over the issue.

"He said he would accept our resignation," Mr. Babb said Monday.

The administration has cited constitutional and legal points in its decision to vote against the baby-formula code, saying the guidelines would restrict the First Amendment rights of businesses and violate antitrust laws. Critics charge that the administration has been swayed by corporate interests.

U.S. Electric System Open To Attack, Agency Warns

By Robert D. Hershey Jr.
New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — The U.S. electric utility system is highly vulnerable to major disruption by terrorists or a wartime attack, and the government has failed to establish plans to deal with such emergencies, according to a study by the General Accounting Office.

The GAO, an investigative agency of Congress, asserted that in one unidentified region of the country an attack carried out easily on just eight substations could result in a widespread loss of power.

Many major metropolitan areas in the region could be without power for days, the researchers said, and could experience rotating blackouts for more than a year. The key components of one substation could be knocked out with just a rifle, thereby leaving an important military installation without power, they said.

Although the agency did not say it would be possible to defend electric installations against attack, it criticized efforts that had been made to cope with emergencies and to restore power.

"Federal plans and programs for managing electrical emergencies which may arise from war, sabotage or terrorism are inadequate or nonexistent," the report asserted. "Further, federal guidance and coordination with respect to such electrical emergency preparedness is lacking."

Among its recommendations for better planning, the GAO said the Department of Energy should establish priorities for different electricity users so that the most important customers such as military installations, industrial plants and hospitals would be the last to lose power or the first to have it restored in an emergency.

The agency also said the Energy Department should consider the need to stockpile key equipment so that such structures as substations and transmission towers could be replaced more quickly.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency and the National Electric Reliability Council generally agreed with the recommendations. The Department of Energy, however, said that it found the study and its conclusions misleading "since no differentiation is made between nondefense and defense-related emergencies."

Reagan Approach at UN: A Change in Tone

By Bernard D. Nussiter
New York Times Service

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. — The Reagan administration has said that it wants to put off until the fall any talk of transferring resources from rich to poor nations.

The conventional view in the halls of the United Nations holds that this is one more example of a radical policy shift by the new U.S. administration. On South-West Africa (Namibia), on Israel, on a Law of the Sea treaty, the Reagan administration is said to be sharply different from its predecessors, uncooperative if not hostile. But other diplomats say the change is more in tone than substance, more in style than in matter.

"Every new administration tries to distinguish itself sharply from the one before," a veteran Western diplomat said. "In this view, the principal difference is the bluntness of the Reagan manner."

The plain fact is that the global bargain sought by the Third World was hopelessly blocked nearly a year ago, when Jimmy Carter was still in the White House. The United States, Britain and West Germany, serving as the vanguard for all rich nations, refused last September to approve even an agenda and working methods for a conference on the issue.

Problem Points

They feared that the Third World was trying to turn the International Monetary Fund into a money printing press. Industrial nations were dismayed by the refusal of oil-producing nations to consider bargaining over price and supply. Above all, nations contending with inflationary pressures amid stagnant economies at home are unlikely to provide huge amounts of foreign aid to the Third World, or to accept cartels to push up commodity prices, key points in the plan for transferring resources.

So when Jose S. Sorzano, secretary at the U.S. mission at the UN, said that Washington could not talk until the fall, other diplomats' expressions of "regret and deep disappointment" had a somewhat hollow ring. Under Mr. Carter, officials engaged in futile talk; under Mr. Reagan, they do not talk at all.

The handling of the situation in Namibia is much the same, Mr. Carter's delegate, Donald F. McHenry, worked with Western allies for three years on a plan to free the huge territory from South Africa, which effectively vetoed the plan in January. This brought an African demand in the Security Council for trade sanctions against South Africa. The new Reagan delegate, Jean J. Kirkpatrick, with her French and British colleagues, vetoed the sanctions demand.

Seasoned diplomats at the UN believe that Mr. McHenry would

U.S. Finds Drop in Student Enrollments

By Kathy Sawyer
Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON — Since 1970, as a tidal wave of the baby boom generation rolled past, the number of students enrolled in U.S. elementary schools has plummeted by 20 percent, or 6.5 million, according to a Census Bureau survey.

High schools have been feeling the pinch since 1976. They have lost at least 1 million students, half of them in the last year, and the emptying of their classrooms will accelerate.

The survey of school enrollment trends, released on Sunday, depicted a national student body that, while dwindling in numbers, has become more diverse in age, race, sex and other characteristics.

Women attending college now outnumber men. Since 1975, 1 million more women than anticipated have enrolled in college, while the number of men declined by half a million.

"Most of the extra women are older," said a census official who worked on the survey. The rates of attendance are now about the same for men and women of regular college age. Of the older female students, the official said, "most are employed."

Students, Police Clash
At Nairobi University

NAIROBI — Students clashed with police after Kenyan authorities closed Nairobi University. The authorities decided on the closure after a week of student meetings and a demonstration in support of political and educational grievances.

Student sources said they started marching through the city Monday after being ordered to leave the campus.

Reagan administration has blocked it and is not sure it wants a treaty at all.

But again, this may be a distinction without a difference. U.S. mining interests that oppose the pact enjoy so much congressional support that the Carter administration might well have indefinitely put off submission of any treaty to the Senate. Or Mr. Carter might have signed it but not allowed it to be ratified. If the Reagan team decides a treaty is in the national interest, it has a chance to reshape it, to win the needed two-thirds Senate vote.

In the end, several diplomats at the UN agree, the perceived interests of nations are more important than shifts in political parties, however different their public voices.

U.S. Women Turn to Handgun Training Out of Fear of Becoming Crime Victims

By Frances Frank Marcus New York Times Service NEW ORLEANS — Jo Ann Colomb, a suburban mother of three young children, has never allowed her 11-year-old son, Chris, to own a toy gun. Cindy Parr, an office manager for a doctor, used to be "scared to death" of guns.

Both recently completed a course in the basics of how to shoot a pistol. Both own revolvers, and both say they would not hesitate to use the gun should it become necessary.

They are among an increasing number of women who, out of fear of becoming crime victims, are buying guns and learning to use them.

A spot check with the police and owners of shooting ranges in the New Orleans metropolitan area, where a hard-to-obtain permit is required to carry a gun, found little apparent increase in pistol possession among women. But the trend was evident in many other cities, especially in the South and Southwest.

When the Fraternal Order of Police dropped a firearms course in Birmingham, Ala., about two years ago, "the women kept calling in they really wanted the class," said Glen Garrett, an instructor at Security Training Institute. The company, which trains guards, began a course of its own for residents.

Series of Rapes

The sheriff's office in Galveston County, Texas, began offering a firearms training course for women three years ago in response to public demand, spurred by a series of rapes in the county. Under Sheriff Charles Wiley said the course had attracted "professional women, doctors, psychiatrists, news reporters, housewives — and an 86-year-old woman who walked with a cane. She said she was interested in being able to defend her own home."

A rise in crime and gun sales prompted the city of Hialeah, Fla., to start a monthly firearms safety course for business people early this year. "We knew they were buying guns," said Lt. J.J. Hedrick, training section commander of the Hialeah Police Department. "How many knew how to use them, we weren't too sure of. Our feeling is that the people out there that have guns need to know how to protect themselves from themselves."

Two thousand women have called to inquire about a security and firearms course scheduled to begin in June in Houston, said Robert Baer, a director of the Greater Houston Sportsmen's Coalition, which is sponsoring the course with the cooperation of the Houston Police Department, the county sheriff, the mayor and the district attorney.

More than 1,000 women and 200 men recently signed up for a free three-evening course given by the sheriff's office of St. Bernard Parish, just east of New Orleans. Since the first of the year, hundreds of women have been trained in the use of pistols at Solutions Inc., a company affiliated with a large gun shop in Gretna, across the Mississippi River from New Orleans. Graduates of gun courses in New Orleans and its suburbs say they were impelled by fear over rising crime rates, despite recent FBI statistics showing that last year New Orleans had one of the lowest rates of increase in major crime of the 25 largest U.S. cities.

In Louisiana, it is legal for anyone except a convicted felon or an alien to keep firearms in his or her home or car. Though "intentional concealment" of a gun is illegal, Byron Woods, an investigator for the state attorney general's office, said: "If a policeman tried to stop every woman to check her purse for firearms, I'm quite sure he'd find a lot of guns but he'd raise a lot of eyebrows as well."

Karen Warsheuer, a 33-year-old artist, has twice been the victim of armed robbery, most recently last fall when she awakened to see a man with a gun crawling on her bedroom floor. She rolled over and slid a .22-caliber pistol out of a bedside drawer, but could not bring herself to pull the trigger. The man left without harming her, but he took with him $5,100 worth of jewelry and $250 in Christmas shopping money.

After the robbery, she bought a .38-caliber pistol and signed up for the course at Solutions Inc. "The last thing on my mind is to kill," she said, "but if I have to, I will."

"I still have an aversion to guns, and I would rather live in a world where there aren't any," said a 32-year-old law student who recently took the Solutions course but did not want to be identified. "But I made a personal decision that in my house, if there is an intruder, I would rather be in a position to be able to defend myself than to be a defenseless victim."

Pope, on Birthday, Leaves Intensive Care

By Lawrence K. Altman New York Times Service

ROME — Pope John Paul II celebrated his 61st birthday on Monday by moving from the intensive care unit to a private room in Gemelli hospital in Rome, but the pontiff could not have any birthday cake because he is not yet allowed to eat anything by mouth. The pope is receiving all his nourishment by vein in the form of fluids and chemicals.

Despite the transfer, Dr. Luigi Candia, the hospital director, said it would not be possible to give a prognosis about the pope's recovery for another few days.

Move Puzzling

Meanwhile, in a move particularly surprising for its timing, the pope's doctors are allowing medical experts from other countries to come to Rome to consult on his case.

The move was puzzling because Dr. Emilio Tresalti, the chief of staff of the hospital, said in an earlier interview that no consultants had been called in. At that time, Pope John Paul was recovering in the intensive care unit. Dr. Tresalti also said that there were no plans to call in any consultants.

However, Vatican and hospital officials said Monday that they had approved such consultants because they had been swamped by offers of free consultations by doctors throughout the world.

The number of consultants and their names were not announced. However, the Rev. Romeo Panciroli, a Vatican spokesman, said that those who offered their services included doctors who had illustrious international reputations.

Father Panciroli said that the Vatican secretary of state, Cardinal Agostino Casaroli, had approved the consultations. The spokesman stressed that the consultations were not linked to the pope's clinical condition. Rather, Father Panciroli said, the consultations were accepted because of the extensive worldwide interest shown in prayers for the pope's recovery.

Pope John Paul underwent a 5-hour, 25-minute abdominal operation to repair extensive damage to his intestines shortly after he was shot in St. Peter's Square last Wednesday.

Prague Said to Begin Probe of 16 Activists

VIENNA — The Czechoslovak state prosecutor's office has started pretrial investigations against 16 rights activists, including a former foreign minister, emigrant sources here said Monday.

They said six persons were being allowed to remain at large while the investigations were conducted, including former Foreign Minister Jiri Hajek and Ivan Havel, brother of the imprisoned playwright Vaclav Havel. The sources said the 16 activists faced trial on subversion charges, punishable by three to 10 years in prison.

For Pope John Paul's birthday, scores of visitors, patients and hospital workers signed a register offering a prayer for his recovery. Children in the pediatrics ward sent get-well cards to their fellow patient.

Also, a Mass was celebrated for the pope's recovery on the hospital's second floor.

From his new room, Pope John Paul has a view of St. Peter's Basilica at the Vatican, about 2 miles away.

The pope still has a fever, according to Monday's medical bulletin, but shows no sign of infection. Dr. Candia, the hospital director, said that infectious such as peritonitis were still possibilities in the pope's case. But the bulletin said that Pope John Paul's laboratory tests had shown that he was progressing favorably.

Mitterrand Is Expected To Call Elections Quickly

PARIS — President-elect Francois Mitterrand is expected to appoint a new government, dissolve the National Assembly and call legislative elections within 48 hours of his inauguration Thursday, informed sources said Monday.

Mr. Mitterrand, 64, will officially take over Thursday morning at the Elysee Palace when President Valery Giscard d'Estaing leaves office. The formal inauguration ceremonies are expected to be followed by celebrations at the Place de la Concorde in central Paris. Children will be released from class for the day.

Lionel Jospin, first secretary of the Socialist Party, said in a radio interview Sunday that "soon after" Mr. Mitterrand is installed as president, he will name his government ministers, dissolve the assembly and call two-round legislative elections — reportedly June 14 and 21 — in an effort to get a leftist majority that would support the president-elect's Socialist program.

A public opinion poll published in this week's edition of the newsmagazine Le Point gives Mr. Mitterrand a good chance of winning a leftist majority. The poll indicated that 36 percent of French voters would back Socialist candidates in the legislative elections. Sixteen percent said they would vote for Communist or extreme leftist candidates, while 42 percent favored candidates of the conservative parties.

Conservatives now have an 89-seat majority in the 491-seat National Assembly. The last elections were in 1978.

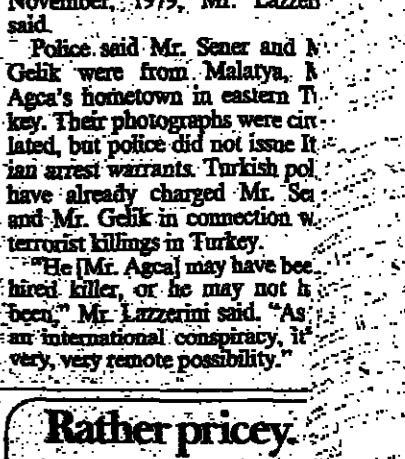

"Political Agreement" The polling agency questioned 1,595 French voters two and three days after the May 10 presidential election, in which Mr. Mitterrand won 52 percent of the vote.

Mr. Jospin said that "in the perspective of the new legislative elections, seeking to bring about a political agreement" the Socialists would confer with all the political groups that supported Mr. Mitterrand in the presidential race. He said those groups included the Communists, small leftist parties and supporters from the neo-Gaullist party.

Mr. Mitterrand said repeatedly during his campaign that if the Communists formed a significant part of the National Assembly, they would be considered for Cabinet posts. Since the election, Communist Party leaders have asked to be included in the government, including the transitional Cabinet.

Mr. Jospin said "basic problems" to be taken up with the Communists included their approval of the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, which the Socialists condemned.

Rather pricey.

Austrian A-Plant Is Expensive 'Museum'

By Kenneth Jantz The Associated Press

VIENNA — It cost $600 million and took eight years to build, but the nuclear plant at Zwentendorf, 23 miles (37 kilometers) northwest of Vienna, has received an average of 100 visitors a day. It has not been put into operation because of public fears about nuclear power and the resulting political conflict.

Industry studies have shown that it would cost more than $300 million to convert Zwentendorf from a nuclear plant to a fossil fuel power plant, and an undetermined amount to dismantle the nuclear elements.

Parliamentary investigations recently reopened to determine what should be done with the plant, which costs the government almost $70 million a year to maintain.

"By any criteria in the world, this plant would have been opened long ago," said Alfred Netwich, Zwentendorf's director. "But political questions are different from all other questions in life."

Because of opposition to nuclear power plants, the government held a referendum on the licensing of the plant in 1978. Despite public opinion polls showing widespread support for Zwentendorf, licensing was opposed by 50.5 percent of the voters.

As opposition to nuclear power continued to grow throughout Austria and Western Europe, the governing Socialist Party backed off from its pro-nuclear stance and decided to mothball the plant.

If the Socialists could get the support of two-thirds of the parliament, they could license Zwentendorf. But opposition leaders reportedly are uncertain about the strength of opinion on the matter within their own parties, do not appear inclined to let the Socialists out of an embarrassing political situation.

"The politics of the whole issue can be very frustrating for us here," said Zwentendorf's technical director, Walter Nistler, whose staff of 130 maintains the concrete complex.

In recent weeks, Anton Benya, president of the Trade Union Federation, renewed his support for opening Zwentendorf, while Gunter Wiesinger, an official of the opposition People's Party, said the plant already needed millions of dollars in repairs.

Mr. Netwich, the plant director, rejected the People's Party criticism, claiming that the plant was ready to go into production and could reach its full 600-megawatt capacity in two years. Originally Zwentendorf was scheduled to produce 11 percent of the electricity used in Austria by 1980.

U.S. Debate on Refugee Status Holds Up Admission of Thousands of Indochinese

By Robert Peir
New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — U.S. immigration officials, uncertain of the new legal standard for identifying refugees, have held up the admission of 5,000 to 6,000 people from Indochina who have been stranded for months in refugee camps in Southeast Asia.

The State Department insists that they are refugees because they have a "well-founded fear" of suffering persecution if they return to their homes in Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos. Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. has written to Attorney General William French Smith complaining that U.S. immigration officers in Southeast Asia have deferred action on refugee applications at a rate much higher than was justified.

Senior State Department officials, including Walter J. Stoessel Jr., the undersecretary for political affairs, and Morton I. Abramowitz, the ambassador to Thailand, met last week with Mr. Smith to emphasize their concern.

The associate attorney general, Rudolph W. Giuliani, who attended the meeting, said Friday that immigration officers had deferred action on 16 percent of the Indochinese refugee applicants interviewed since January. In recent months he said, the rate of deferrals was even higher, and since last October, 5,000 to 6,000 applications, representing 8 percent of the people interviewed, had been deferred.

These cases represent a small fraction of the 317,000 people living in the Asian camps. The debate over them is part of a larger concern over what obligation the United States has to the people of Indochina after two decades of American involvement there. After U.S. officials decide the cases now in dispute, they will have to act on many thousands of similar matters involving refugees who want to come to the United States.

Legitimate Applicants

Mr. Giuliani said that on the basis of information provided by the State Department, the vast majority of the 5,000 to 6,000 applicants were legitimate refugees and should be recognized as such. Mr. Smith said he would probably issue a directive to that effect next week.

Mr. Giuliani and other Justice Department officials said that immigration officers in Southeast Asia had apparently changed the way they were applying the law without going through the chain of command, by checking with the State Department or consulting Congress.

The controversy illustrates some of the questions and problems that have arisen in the Indochinese refugee program in its six years. Among the questions are these:

- If the United States has a special responsibility to the people of Southeast Asia arising from its involvement in the war there, how long does the responsibility last?
- Is it important for the United States to provide a non-Communist alternative for the peoples of Indochina?
- Do generous opportunities for resettlement stimulate the exodus of people from Vietnam and other countries of Indochina?
- At what point does the flow of refugees become simply a stream of immigrants?

In the past, attorneys general admitted refugees on an ad hoc basis, and the definition of "refugee" was limited to those fleeing Communist countries or the Middle East. The Refugee Act of 1980 ended those restrictions, deleted the reference to Communist countries and incorporated the broader UN definition, under which a refugee is anyone outside his home country who will not return for fear of persecution.

The law also required the attorney general to consult with Congress at the beginning of each fiscal year on the number of refugees to be admitted from each country.

Special Concern

In recent months, immigration officers in Southeast Asia have reported that some of the Asians they interviewed were apparently not political refugees or persons of "special concern" to the United States. State Department officials contend that formal consultations with Congress last fall established a presumption that the Indochinese were refugees. As a result of those consultations, the United States pledged to take 168,000 Indochinese refugees this year, or 14,000 a month.

A study published last November by the Joint Economic Committee of Congress said there was reason to question the blanket assumption that all those leaving Laos and Vietnam were refugees. The study, written by Astrl Suhrke of American University here, said, "Most recent arrivals are 'low-risk' refugees that do not belong to harassed minority groups, do not have close family ties in the United States and were not associated with American programs during the war."

Mr. Suhrke said the U.S. policy toward persons fleeing such non-Communist countries as Haiti was stricter than its policy toward Vietnamese and Laotians. The State Department contends his study was flawed by a "benign view" of the Communist governments in Indochina.

To answer some of the questions raised by Mr. Suhrke and others, the United States says it plans to send a fact-finding team to Southeast Asia to visit refugee camps, interview refugees and talk to officials in the "first asylum" countries, including Thailand and Malaysia.

The study, written by Astrl Suhrke of American University here, said, "Most recent arrivals are 'low-risk' refugees that do not belong to harassed minority groups, do not have close family ties in the United States and were not associated with American programs during the war."

Mr. Suhrke said the U.S. policy toward persons fleeing such non-Communist countries as Haiti was stricter than its policy toward Vietnamese and Laotians. The State Department contends his study was flawed by a "benign view" of the Communist governments in Indochina.

To answer some of the questions raised by Mr. Suhrke and others, the United States says it plans to send a fact-finding team to Southeast Asia to visit refugee camps, interview refugees and talk to officials in the "first asylum" countries, including Thailand and Malaysia.

END OF EXILE — Hasina Wazad, daughter of Bangladesh's first president, Sheikh Mujibur Rahman, flew from India to Dacca with her son and daughter to end six years of self-imposed exile and demand the trial of those who killed her father and most of his family in a 1975 coup. The opposition Awami League has elected her its president.

Composer Hugo Friedhofer Dies; Won Oscar Award for Film Score

Los Angeles Times Service

LOS ANGELES — Hugo Friedhofer, 79, an Academy Award-winning composer and film orchestrator, died Sunday. He had been hospitalized after a fall.

Friedhofer, with music by Mr. Friedhofer included "The Best Years of Our Lives," for which he received an Oscar in 1947, as well as "The Adventures of Marco Polo," "The Young Lions," "One-Eyed Jacks" and "Joan of Arc."

Known for his mordant wit, he loved to tell of the mogul in charge of a 1932 picture who told Mr. Friedhofer that "since this story is set in France, we should hear lots of French horns." Mr. Friedhofer acquiesced, but managed his own satiric triumph when the film's lovers, fleeing the French Revolution, approached the cliffs of Dover to the sound of a single English horn.

Of all his scoring, he said he was proudest of "The Best Years of Our Lives" and of the scene where Dana Andrews, playing a former pilot, sits in the cockpit of a scrapped B-17 reliving his personal war. Mr. Friedhofer had the orchestra simulate the sound of engines revving as a distant melody.

mentator for Sports Illustrated and other publications, died Saturday following a heart attack.

The writer's full name, which he never used professionally, was Hamilton Prieaux Bee Maule.

Raymond L. Thurston
SARASOTA, Fla. (WP) — Raymond L. Thurston, 68, U.S. ambassador to Haiti from 1961 to 1963 and to Somalia from 1965 to 1969, died Tuesday of cancer.

Jeannette Piccard
MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — The Rev. Jeannette Piccard, 86, a balloonist who became one of the first women to be ordained as an Episcopal priest, died Sunday of cancer.

In 1934, Mrs. Piccard piloted a balloon into the stratosphere to assist her husband, Jean Piccard, a Swiss professor, in his research on cosmic rays. The balloon reached an altitude of 57,579 feet.

After the death of her husband in 1963, Mrs. Piccard was ordained a church deacon in 1971 and became a priest in July, 1974. Her controversial ordination, along with that of 10 other women, was performed by four bishops in Philadelphia.

Jobs Nonexistent, Good Land Dwindling In New South African Black 'Homeland'

By Joseph Lelyveld
New York Times Service

SIYABUSWA, South Africa — Few South Africans have ever heard of this black shantytown in Transvaal, north of Pretoria, or of the obscure little state of which it is supposed to be the capital.

There is no sign on the nearest highway to indicate the turning, nor along the 18 miles (29 kilometers) of rutted side road to show the boundary of KwaNdebele, which in April became the latest of 10 black states to be given self-rule within South Africa.

The ethnic enclave, comprising 210 square miles (546 square kilometers) of rolling veld, or African grassland, was set up for the Ndebele people, formerly known as the Matabele, a tribe of a few hundred thousand related linguistically to the Zulu, who have their own KwaZulu state.

Now theoretically just a step away from independence, the land allotted to KwaNdebele was once divided among 30 white farmers. In the 1970 census its population was said to be 32,000. Today it is somewhere between 166,000, a figure furnished by census officials in Pretoria, and 299,000, a number provided by the chief minister of KwaNdebele, Simon Skhosana.

Every day, Mr. Skhosana said, South African authorities deposit about 20 families in his state.

They are brought with their possessions in white government trucks with green canvas tops, having been ordered to leave adjacent rural areas to the south around the Transvaal towns of Bronkhorstspuit, Middelburg and Bethal, which were proclaimed white by South African legislation.

White politicians have recently become self-conscious about the policy of sorting out the black population by ethnic group. Two years ago, however, a junior member of the government declared that more than 9,000 Ndebele-speaking families had been removed to their supposed homeland in a year.

The veld in KwaNdebele is now covered with widening patches of mud-and-thatch hovels, metal shanties and the green canvas tents that are standard government issue for resettlement sites.

The only visible industry is the government of the new black state. The only housing programs are for Mr. Skhosana and his ministers, who live side by side in small ranch-style structures behind a high barbed-wire fence, and for government employees, who are given simple under-block homes with small solar-heating devices atop the bathrooms.

If there is any building that is plainly worth more than the car parked in the chief minister's driveway — a BMW sedan that sells for $35,000 in South Africa — it is the gymnasium-style structure that houses an appointed legislature.

Elsewhere in KwaNdebele, which lies astride the upper Olfants River, agriculture is in decline because the growing population is taking over the grazing land and competing for the water, which is in short supply. There are no jobs within commuting distance. Most men end up working in Pretoria, 60 miles away.

Stakes in Hillside

KwaNdebele's newest settlements have the appearance of unplanned squatter camps, but under the supervision of white officials from the Ministry of Cooperation and Development, little stakes have been driven into the hillside every 60 feet or so to indicate the plots that can be allotted to new arrivals.

The Nduli family got their plot on what was an empty hillside on a farm that had belonged to a white family named Smit in an area known as Kwaggafontein, 10 miles from Siyabuswa. Now there are scores of shanties and hundreds of people, mostly women and children.

Kleinbooi Nduli, the youngest of Rose Nduli's three grown sons, arrived on a truck with the family's possessions, now stacked inside and around a thatch hovel that served as a shelter until the oldest brother, Johannes, could return from Pretoria with metal siding to make a shack.

Kleinbooi wore a brown shoe on his right foot and a black boot on his left; the boot was tied with pieces of copper wire. With a shovel he dug away at the veld grass to clear his plot.

Until he was abruptly told that his services had been terminated, he was living on a white farm near Middelburg with his brother's wife and three children, his sister and her child, and his mother. His brother Johannes and another brother, Paulus, worked as laborers in a construction gang in Pretoria, earning about $50 a week each, much more than the $34 a month the farmer had paid Kleinbooi.

He was asked whether he minded being forced out of a job in Middelburg. He laughed in embarrassment and said the farmer had sometimes hit him. His mother was more direct.

"The law is the law and we have nothing to say about it," she said in a matter-of-fact tone.

Chief Minister Skhosana, who once worked as a driver in Johannesburg, laughed when he was asked whether he had asked the white authorities to stop bringing new people into his state.

"It's impossible," he said, meaning apparently that such a request would have no effect. He had asked, however, for more land. "When they give it to you, you say 'thank you' and ask again," he said.

Our idea of the perfect merger: everybody wins.

In the merger of Bache Group with the Prudential Insurance Company of America, there are only winners.

If you're a Bache client, you win the comfortable feeling of having your securities account at a firm that's part of a $60 billion corporate family. You also win the prospect of a vast and uniquely impressive range of investment opportunities.

Bache wins, too. Following the most successful year in our history, we obtain a degree of stability and financial clout unprecedented and unequalled in the securities field.

We also gain the opportunity to continue, on a greatly enlarged scale, our recent record of innovation and diversification.

For example—beyond all the financial services we have traditionally provided—we now plan to offer an expanded list of investment products in real estate, oil and gas, insurance, and other areas.

And, of course, Prudential wins. Already the nation's largest life insurer, Prudential continues its aggressive diversification program in financial services by adding to its organization a leading brokerage and investment banking firm with 3,000 brokers in 200 offices worldwide, backed by $3 billion in assets.

When you consider all that, if you're not a Bache client, maybe you'd like to become one.

After all, if Prudential can merge with Bache, why shouldn't you?

Bache
The winning attitude.

Kleinwort Benson

A summary of the Statement by Mr. Robert Henderson,
Chairman of the parent company,
KLEINWORT, BENSON, LONSDALE LIMITED
in the 1980 Report and Accounts

Group profit, after tax and after transfers to inner reserves, totalled £19,015,000. This represents an increase of 57% over last year's total of £12,096,000, which was itself 35% above the 1978 figure. The dividend of 9p compares with 6.5p per share for 1979. The disclosed capital and reserves have increased to £154,864,000 (up 40%).

BANKING
Consolidated balance sheet totals increased by £456,000,000 in the first six months and by a further £243,000,000 in the second six months of 1980, a total increase of 29% over the previous year, and the overall level of profitability in the Banking Division increased. A good start has been made in developing the business potential of Martens & Weyhausen. In Australia, we have obtained the necessary permissions for the formation of a 50:50 joint venture with Colonial Mutual Life Assurance of Melbourne which will engage in corporate finance work, project finance and banking. Our branch and subsidiary in Hong Kong continue to broaden their activities and the representative offices in New York, Chicago, Singapore, Tokyo and in other territories played a productive role in our world-wide banking activities.

In the Middle East, our business has grown on a broad front, with many different parts of the Group involved. Fendrake Limited also has had a good year.

BULLION
The unprecedented activity in bullion towards the end of 1979 was surpassed in the early months of 1980. In London, New York and Hong Kong, the skills of Sharpe Fixley's gold and silver dealers and their support staff were thoroughly tested, and we believe they have gained considerably in market share and reputation. Their contribution to our banking group profits in 1980 was exceptionally large. Our two bullion processing companies, J. S. Knight and Edward Day & Baker also enjoyed another excellent year.

CORPORATE FINANCE
The gross revenue earned by the Corporate Finance Division comfortably exceeded that earned in any previous year. There was a very high level of activity in all areas of the Division's operations, both domestic and international. In February of this year we were pleased to act in the successful offer for sale to the public of Ordinary Shares in British Aerospace.

PROJECTS
The Project Division has had a satisfactory year. Although British exporters currently face many difficulties, the Division has successfully arranged financial support for significant export values during the year. These included the first ECGDF underwritten Buyer Credit to be arranged for the People's Republic of China. Valuable advisory assignments have been carried out for clients in the Far East, Latin America and Europe.

INVESTMENT
The funds under the management both of Kleinwort Benson Investment Management Limited and of Kleinwort Benson International Investment Limited have again increased, both in number and in total value. Domestically and internationally, the performance of our funds has been of a high order. The Trustee Department had a successful year. Our subsidiaries in Jersey and Guernsey continue to prosper. Kleinwort Benson Geneva has also made good progress.

Art Buchwald
All You Vegetables,
Shape Up or Else!

WASHINGTON — "The vegetable garden is ready for your inspection, sir."
"Thank you, Sergeant. Now hear this. As commander of this spring garden, I want every plant to line up, in rows four abreast. Let's move it, on the double. You asparagus down there. I want your shoulders back, and your spears straight up. If you tomato plants don't stop sagging, I'm going to pull you up by your roots. Do you hear me? I SAID, DO YOU HEAR ME? — that's better.

Buchwald

"This is the sorriest excuse for vegetable life I've ever seen. But let me tell you something: By the time I get finished, every last one of you is going to be fit to eat, or I'll know the reason why.
"You think all it takes is a little mulch and fertilizer to be a vegetable? Well, you're wrong, wrong, wrong. You've had an easy time of it, sacking out and slouching in your beds. Now you're going to start producing or I'll know the reason why.
"From this day on you're going to shape up or else. Is that understood? And that goes for the rhubarb, too.
"Sergeant, why do these corn stalks look so sick?"
"I don't know, sir. I've tried to get them to straighten up, but they keep flopping over."
"Maybe they could use a little dicolite. Perhaps if we tie them to a stick for a week, they'll know how to stand at attention."
"Isn't that cruel and unusual punishment?"
"It's nothing compared to what they'll face when they go up against the corn borers. I'm trying to save these plants' lives, and we can't do that by coddling them. Tie 'em up, and that's an order."
"Sir, sir."
"Why do these new wax beans look so sallow?"
"I don't know, sir. I think they've been high on nitrogen."
"They're all zonked out. From now on, no one gets any nitrogen

Those Who Convert Literature Into Gossip
Don't Get What Reading's All About

and shaped as this. I don't have a younger brother, as Zuckerman does; my father didn't die; no one tried to kidnap my mother, but I thought, 'what if?' I was looking for things that would crystallize a vague and hazy experience. Why make Zuckerman my age? Because I know what it means to be of that generation. Why have Zuckerman write that kind of book? Because I know about that kind of book and its connotations and moral sensibility that transform raw experience into fiction. The experience is the ground that you set your feet on. Those who convert literature into gossip don't get what reading's all about."

The New York Times
Author Roth's complaint.

Reticent about his life, though eager to talk about Truth and Art and Fiction, Roth, at 48, still displays the professional manner he acquired serving a literary apprenticeship to Henry James and Gustave Flaubert.
Only with close friends does Roth also display his gift for verbal improvisation and mimicry, and his manic wit — gifts developed as a child listening to Borscht Belt comedians. Yet it is these two inimical sensibilities together — the one willfully civilized — that form the animating forces of Roth's fiction, accounting for what he has called the curious "zigzag" of his career.

Certainly his early work from "Goodbye Columbus," which won him a National Book Award at the age of 26, to "When She Was Good," a studied account of a Midwestern Joan of Arc bent on a moral crusade, reflected a preoccupation with civility and social obligations. The prose was refined, even fastidious, and it was informed by an earnest morality. At the time, Roth, who had grown up in Newark, N.J., the son of an insurance salesman, tended to regard fiction as "something like a religious calling" — an elevated notion, he once wrote, that "dovetailed nicely in my case with a penchant for ethical striving that I had absorbed as a Jewish child."

He approached his chosen vocation with high ideals and modest expectations. "My expectation was that I would always have to teach at a university to earn a living," he recalled. "Nor did I particularly just want to be a writer. There is a studious side of me that likes to read and teach, and back then, $3,800 a year was quite enough for me to live on."

Setting an Odd Goal
By the mid-'60s, however, Roth had spent several years in psychoanalysis; he had been scarred by a bad marriage, not unlike the one depicted in "My Life as a Man," and he had begun to hunger after the success he saw such friends as John Updike and William Styron achieving. He had also been criticized for being anti-Semitic, "self-hating" and fastidious, and had set himself the odd goal, as he wrote, "of becoming the writer some Jewish critics had been telling me I was all along: irresponsible, consciousnessless, unserious."
The result, of course, was "Portnoy," which used to outrageously effect the raw, impassioned

PEOPLE: Yoko Ono Terms Lennon 'Compulsively Jealous'

Slain Beatles star John Lennon was a compulsively jealous husband with a "huge inferiority complex," his widow, Yoko Ono, said in an interview. Miss Ono told New York magazine. "After we were together, he made me write out a list of all the men I'd slept with before we met. I started to do it quite casually — then I realized how serious it was to John." Miss Ono denied allegations that she had pursued Lennon, who was shot to death last Dec. 8 outside the couple's New York City apartment and somehow turned him away from the Beatles. "People said that I ran after him. What really happened is neither of us really happened is neither of us really happened. Each of us was married at the time (1966). John was terrified to make any move because of the Beatles thing." Miss Ono also asserted that after they began living together, Lennon's jealousy was so great that he once insisted that she accompany him to the men's room in a recording studio because there were other men in the studio. "He didn't even like me knowing the Japanese language because that was a part of me that didn't belong to him. After a while, I couldn't even read any papers or magazines in Japanese. Despite Lennon's musical talent, Miss Ono said he had an intense inferiority complex. "He was a genius but he had this huge inferiority complex. He was brilliant as an artist, but he didn't think he was capable of it." Miss Ono's only remark about her feelings and thoughts during the time of Lennon's death was a reference to her eating habits. "On the day afterward, of course, I couldn't eat anything. Then all I wanted to eat was chocolate. I kept remembering how much John loved chocolate." Miss Ono said she ate nothing but chocolate and mushrooms for a month after his death.

London, under its new Labour administration, has lost time in turning left — and its move is to boycott the wedding in St. Paul's Cathedral. Prince Charles and Lady Spencer. Since the Greater London Council swung to Labour's biggest local government authority has elected an announced left-wing leader, Miss Kolhaur had failed to appear in his court and had avoided the summons. Miss Kolhaur, 26, spotted a 50-year-old man in a 50-year-old suit, Alamed, who described himself as a devout Moslem, has filed charges against Miss Kolhaur on the grounds of blackmailing the Indian women and trying to gain cheap popularity by publicizing the case.

Three Japanese fishermen picked up 96 bars of gold worth $734,000 that they fished up from the Straits of Korea three days ago. The fishermen, who were bobbing in the water waiting for a fishing expedition years ago and pulled up a net attached to the float. Attached to the net was a plastic bag wrapped up in a plastic bag. The gold was never traced. The fishermen had to wait three weeks before a finder's fee was paid. For storing the probable cost of $45,000, the fishermen forked over $45,000 also expected to pay the gold an estimated $10,000 which came due next March. — SAMUEL JUS
